

GLOBAL WARMING

Garments are sent globally for fabrication purposes, using shipping via planes, ships and other, causing a preponderance of toxic fumes to be released into the air. This has a huge impact upon the environment, especially global warming. However, some may even be aware of these conditions, yet seem to fail to care, as great amounts of people do not seem to understand the intense impact these factors have upon the wellbeing of the entirety of humanity, as well as our daily life. For example, New York City's Manhattan. Although many acknowledge the importance of the island, most people are brutally unaware that this trademark is indeed said to be under water within the next years, because of a "sea level rise over the 21st century of between 56 and 200 centimeters due to global warming." Facts such as this are well known, however most people appear to have become actively ignorant towards this issue, even though its importance is constantly made prominent via activist groups such as Greenpeace and social media sights, dedicated to the cause. Furthermore, one is constantly confronted with the issue of global warming, as well as other environmental factors harming our eco system, through other media, yet some people still do not seem to comprehend, that the environment surrounding all of us, our daily habitat, is changing drastically on a daily basis and the idea that this is false is, in fact, the illusion.