

SOCIAL

Succulents sold at the Green-market in Union Square.

While traditional agriculture and area. Urban farms take is the most common source minimal space, yet provide of fresh produce and greens, the customers and people urban gardening and urban in the city with fresh and agriculture around the world healthy produce, while using has become well known and space that may be wasted well received, especially in if not used for urban farms. New York. I think that urban Also, in New York, many fam- agriculture benefits New ilies come from different lev- York in the most efficient els of the social ladders and ways possible. Since or- some may not be as wealthy ganic produce is not entirely as others. Urban gardening available to such an urban and agriculture benefit the environment such as New urban population as a whole York, urban agriculture pro- because it brings nutritious vides the city with a direct and safe food to families link to fresh produce as well on the lower class as well as making organic produce as the upper class and pro- more accessible. It also op- vides food security to both. tomizes the New York land

A New Yorker coming to the Greenmarket at Union Square to buy fresh produce.

Sunflowers seen at the
Greenmarket at Union
Square that represent the
Fibonacci spiral shape.

