Sherlock

Sherlock sighs

Okay, you've got questions.

John

Yeah, where are we going?

Sherlock

Crime scene. Next?

John

Who are you? What do you do?

Sherlock

What do you think?

John

I'd say private detective ...

Sherlock

But?

John

but the police don't go to private detectives.

Sherlock

I'm a consulting detective. Only one in the world. I invented the job.

John

What does that mean?

Sherlock

It means when the police are out of their depth, which is always, they consult me.

John

The police don't consult amateurs.

Sherlock throws him a look.

Sherlock

When I met you for the first time yesterday, I said, "Afghanistan or Iraq?" You looked surprised.

John

Yes, how did you know?

Sherlock

I didn't know, I saw. Your hair cut, the way you hold yourself, says military. But your conversation as you entered the room

Your limp's really bad when you walk but you don't ask for a chair when you stand, like you've forgotten about it, so it's at least partly psychosomatic. That says the original circumstances of the injury were traumatic. Wounded in action, then. Wounded in action, suntan - Afghanistan or Iraq.

You said I had a therapist.

You've got a psychosomatic limp - of course you've got a therapist. Then there's your brother.
