Elizabeth Street Garden has nearly 200 years of history as a recreational, public space. It is greatly appreciated by the community, and is sustained through community based volunteering and support.

With government plans to destroy the garden in the next few years to turn it into development housing, many members of the community and previous owners of the garden have come together to fight to save the garden. The organization formed, the ESG, is fighting hard to preserve the beautiful sculpture garden through petitioning and advocating.

This coloring book functions as a piece of interactive art and source of education about the green one acre of land in Little Italy.

The original site of P.S. 106, later renamed P.S. 21, was designed by architect C.B.J. Snyder in 1903 with a public outdoor space that functioned as a neighborhood social and civic center.

In 1991, the Elizabeth Street Garden was developed and created by Allan Reiver. Reiver planted an array of perennial flowers, native plants, and trees with a display of architectural remnants, gates, fencing, statuary, tables, and seating from his gallery collection

Aside for Elizabeth Sreet Garden in CB2, which is the district made up of Little Italy and Soho, all the rest of the land is paved.

Each season Elizabeth Street Garden provides a refuge to educate both children and adults about wildlife, habitat restoration, eco-gardening, and sustainable stewardship.
