Topic Choices
Casey Yoon
History of Fashion
Golde, Diana M
February 5, 2018

Date: 1953
Designer: Coco Chanel

It looks feminine but it does not remind of delicate women, means that it looks confident. And, it still looks polished and luxurious even though it is not current style of fashion. This dress is composed with high-waist and tight A-line skirt, theses component are still shown in current fashion. Therefore, it does not look that unsophisticated. But this Chanel dress is absolutely different with my personal style that is far away from feminine style.

Date: 1975
Designer: Yves Saint Laurent

It is very interesting because it has feeling of neutrality and it is similar with my personal style. It is composed with high-waist wide pants: trouser, wide blouse, and a suit jacket. Wide trouser and blouse are all trendy nowadays, and also I enjoy to wear it. Though it is designed in 1975, it looks dress which people wear today. This dress explains that fashion comes back; fashion in the past becomes the latest fashion again.

Date: 1926
Designer: Coco Chanel

It is intriguing because it has feelings of maturity. This dress is composed with shiny decoration on the skirt and side parts of upper part, and has loose fit. These characters reminds me of old women these days. But, interestingly, model looks young. When I see this dress, I am beginning to wonder how dress look like differently by different age. This style is different with my personal style: what I wear in daily and what style I like. It means that I do not wear dress which is decorated with shiny objects in daily and I hate it.