

Talking Picture Exchange

During the process of our photo conversation we weren't quite sure of what the end goal of this activity was. Hence, we started with the most popular references of our time; memes. Interestingly enough we began extracting themes from these images, in reference to shape and color. The conversation took us on a journey that explores a variety of artistic forms/mediums. We shared imagery from different museums around the world, and even though these museums are miles apart there was an overlap in the formal qualities of the exchanged art.

When going through the conversation Sherleen's humorous side surfaced, despite the art focused exchanged. On the other hand, Zeighn's attention to shape and detail emerged through linking photographs from the natural and man-made world. It would be considerable to realize how much we were able to communicate our shared experience through art, and how two drastically different images inflicted the same feelings. We learned that art can act as a tool to connect two individuals, despite their contrasting backgrounds.
